IMAGINE
NEW POSSIBILITIES

ROTHLEY

At Rothley we know that success is forged through building strong relationships with our customers.

We believe that by placing choice back in their hands, through our transformation of hardware, we can help them make the right choice for their home, for the environment and for their pocket.

The establishment of our Global Supply Chain Office and Global Manufacturing Plant in China allows us to keep control of production. We also have complete transparency as to how our products are made. This removes the uncertainty of supply, need for third parties and any hidden costs.

We respond quickly to changes in trends and supply modern, contemporary design without compromising in quality, or in our efforts to preserve the environment. We are committed to the reduction and removal of harmful processes and packaging, by finding alternatives to Hexavalent Chrome (Cr^{6+}) and non-biodegradable poly sleeves.

With over 190 years of industry experience Rothley are proud to be pioneering new technologies and re-inventing product three centuries later.

Our story began with George Burn in 1826 when his original factory was founded in Birmingham, England at the height of the Industrial Revolution.

The business specialised in producing brass-cased tube for bedsteads, fireplace companion sets and curtain poles. With the introduction of electricity, the factory also developed conduit tubes to house electrical wiring used in public buildings, and even ocean liners such as the Queen Mary, first setting sail in 1934.

Over the years, Rothley has continued to be a major producer of, not just tube, but a variety of metal hardware products. During the DIY revolution of the early 70s, we became pioneers producing pre-packaged hardware and cut to size tubing, establishing a trusted position in all major DIY stores across the UK, one we still hold today.

We have continued to expand our business, now offering 12 product categories (and counting!) within the construction, architectural hardware and interiors markets. Rothley look forward to accessorising your home for the next 200 years.
